

Whilst we are not from an armed forces background we have visited the museum many times over the past 8 years. Over this time on every visit, we have read and have learnt more about the Army Flying Corps and are always astonished by the things we discover.

The first time we visited the museum we were excited to find the link to Samuel Franklin Cody having visited the Aldershot Museum. It was great to tie up the two exhibition connections.

It has been incredible to learn how flying came about and the technical progress of the equipment such that is now used today. To think it all started just from trying to see from the air exactly what the attacking forces were doing. It saved many lives and makes compelling reading just how brave our men have been and the incredible stories that have taken place.

It is a privilege to be able to read about the heroes and the normal men that took on the jobs that needed to be done, and indeed still do so today. We believe that it is important to tell all these stories and developments that have been carried on and as to why they had to be taken on. Future generations should know how important our history is, as without them we would all not be living the lives we have now.

We still enjoy visiting and hope to continue doing so for many years to come. We are sure we will still find it very interesting and informative and would like to help the charity by purchasing the Platinum Membership.

As the old saying goes; "You are never too old to learn".

We are proud to feel part of the museum and to help it in some small way.
